HAS A NEW HEIR.

Some communities quickly acquire a mystique all their own. Perhaps it's the distinctive interplay of architecture. The seclusion from urban sprawl. Or the ambitious vision of the original planners.

Into this select group comes The Summit of Anaheim Hills. A master-planned community so unique that contemporary developments simply don't compare.

A community of cohesively designed neighborhoods, with its own parks and schools. And spacious homes on a grand scale, built by craftsmen to withstand the tests of time and taste.

The Summit of Anaheim Hills. The crown passes to a new generation.

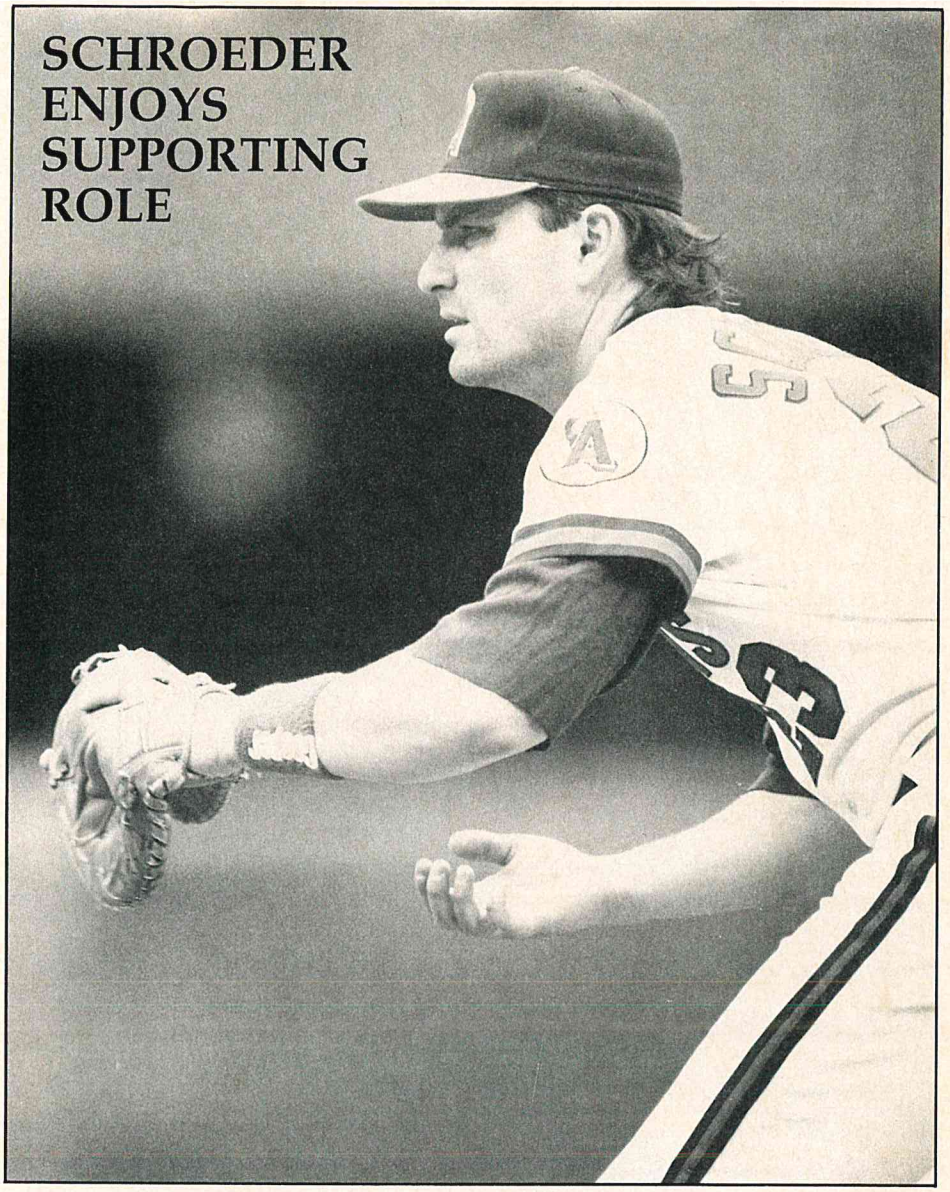
SCHROEDER ENJOYS SUPPORTING ROLE

By Keith Tuber



If Bill Schroeder had been a TV star in the 1960s, he could have played the part of Buddy Sorrell on "The Dick Van Dyke Show" instead of Morey Amsterdam. If he had been a Beatle, he would have been Ringo Star. And if he were a politician today, he'd more likely be Dan Quayle than George Bush, although few people would be laughing at him.

The fact is, Alfred William Schroeder has spent his career as a supporting player, rather than as a star. If he were drawn as a cartoon character, Schroeder would be, well, Schroeder instead of Charlie Brown in the classic Peanuts comic strip.

"Everyone wants to be a superstar, but it doesn't always work out that way," the 30-year-old catcher says. "Most players want to play every day, but you need 24 players to make a team. I just want to contribute when I can, whenever (manager) Doug (Rader) calls on me."

Schroeder came to the Angels from the Brewers in a December trade for utilityman Gus Polidor. Following Bob Boone's defection to Kansas City, the acquisition of a backup for Lance Parrish was viewed by team officials as a top priority. By trading for Schroeder, the Angels accomplished their goal with flying colors.

Actually, the Brewers wouldn't have dealt the valuable second-string receiver if he hadn't demanded a trade. But, as a five-year veteran with the same club, Schroeder was entitled to make such a demand.

He wasn't happy with the playing time he received in Milwaukee, where he backed up starting receiver B.J. Surhoff. Ironically, Schroeder finds himself in a similar situation in California, where he serves as Parrish's understudy.

"I could demand a trade, but I didn't have any control over which team (Brewers General Manager Harry) Dalton dealt me to," Schroeder relates. "But I'm happy to be with the Angels. The change of scenery has been good for me, it's helped my outlook.

"A good friend of mine in Milwaukee, Rob Deer, says every player should be traded at least once. He's right. My attitude has improved, and it's fun to be with a new organization. It's like getting a fresh start."

Schroeder was originally drafted by the Brewers in the eighth round of the June 1979 free agent draft. He started his professional career like the mythical Roy Hobbs, hitting .355 for Butte, with 28 home runs and 77 RBI in just 65 games.

The following season he was promoted to Stockton where he drove in a career-high 97 runs and led the club to the California League title. Schroeder not only impressed fans and club officials with his bat, but also with his glove. The backstop threw out 47 percent of would-be base stealers, earning honors as the catcher with the league's best arm.

In 1982, Schroeder continued to make progress. While playing for Vancouver, he topped Pacific Coast League receivers with a .989 fielding mark while slamming 22 home runs. He was an All-Star at the Triple-A level the following year, but the season remains memorable for more than that. On July 12, 1983, the young catcher was promoted to the major leagues. A day later, he had earned his first big league hit against the Texas Rangers — a triple. While it's rare to see catchers hit triples, it wasn't that surprising to those who were familiar with Schroeder. In his first professional season, the 6'2", 200-pound catcher recorded seven three baggers and stole 18 bases. Quite an accomplishment for any player, let alone one who dons the tools of ignorance.

Schroeder was well on his way toward becoming Milwaukee's first-string catcher when injuries began to take their toll. In 1985, he was disabled with a sore right elbow from May 15-June 14. He subsequently underwent elbow surgery and missed another month, from June 22 to July 19.

The injuries continued in 1986. Schroeder was still recovering from elbow surgery, and began the year on the disabled list. He was out of action from March 29 to May 4, and eventually served time in El Paso on a rehabilitation assignment. It was a discouraging time for Schroeder, who continues to feel some discomfort in his arm during spring workouts.

"Even now, in spring training it takes a while for the arm to stop hurting," Schroeder admits. "But then it comes around. Right now, I'm in perfect health. I couldn't feel better."

In 1987, the catcher enjoyed his best season. He hit an impressive .332 in 75 games, smacking 14 home runs in the process. He won Milwaukee's Comeback Award for his efforts, and set several major league personal highs, including games, at-bats, runs, hits and RBI. Always a clutch hitter, Schroeder led the Brewers with a .391 average with the score tied or a chance to tie it.

Following the satisfying campaign, the catcher looked forward to the 1988 season. However, in spring training the team decided to go with youth, handing the regular catching chores to the promising Surhoff. Instead of picking up where he left off, Schroeder got off to a slow start. He bruised his right knee and went on the disabled list again from July 27-Aug. 15. However, he wasn't hurt that long, or that badly. Politics played a role in the length of time he was disabled. Slugger Rob Deer was coming off the D.L. and Schroeder, whose knee was bothering him, took his place. The ultimate result was another rehab assignment in the minors, this time in Denver. The Maryland native ended the season by hitting just .156 for the

Q&A WITH GREG MINTON

By Keith Tuber

It was the best of times, it was the worst of times. For pitcher Greg Minton, his tale of two cities involves San Francisco and Anaheim rather than Paris and London. From 1979 through 1984 the hard-throwing sinker ball specialist was the toast of the City by the Golden Gate. Tony Bennett may have left his heart in San Francisco, but when facing Greg Minton, National League teams left their collective bats. In 1982 the relief ace was named to the All-Star squad, and finished the season with incredible numbers: 10-4, 1.83 ERA and 30 saves.

Then came the revolution.

For Minton, it meant a divorce that involved a bitter custody fight. The man who was nicknamed "Moon Man" for his outrageous pranks stopped caring about the game of baseball, and himself. "Balloon Man" might have been a more apropos moniker as his weight ballooned to nearly 250 pounds.

The fans turned on Minton even as he turned on himself. He was released by the Giants May 28, 1987, and run out of town just short of being tarred and feathered. While he thought his big league career had come to an unceremonious conclusion, Angels General Manager Mike Port had other ideas. Aided by his new wife Brenda's constant encouragement and training regimen, Minton began his second career in Anaheim where he now serves as a valuable setup man for Bryan Harvey. Ask Minton if he believes in Angels, and the answer is written all over his face.

These days, the right-hander prefers to let his teammates get all the accolades. He's played the role of being the big man on campus. Right now, he just wants to be one of the guys and let his arm do the talking.

Minton: I want to go on record to say I'm totally against this idea. I tried to talk them out of it — I don't want any publicity. But "they" said they wouldn't take no for an answer, that I had to do this. So, I'm doing this against my better judgment.

Halo: As far as publicity goes, wouldn't this be a good time for it since things are going well?

Minton: They are for the team, and I would like it to stay that way. I'm like an offensive lineman in football. Nobody ever hears about them. Our starters are pitching real well, and we've got Bryan Harvey out there. If we can give him the ball, we're going to win games. My whole job is to go in there, get an inning-and-a-third or two innings or whatever is needed, and get my rear-end out of there. Nobody knows about me, nobody hears about me and we win. If that continues, I'll be a real happy boy at the end of the year.

Halo: The unsung hero?

Minton: That's good enough for me. In San Francisco I had 30 saves and was on an All-Star team. I was a poster boy there, and it was fun. And also at the end of my career in San Francisco, I was the 13th man on a 10-man team. So, I've been on both ends of it. I've got a job now, it's an important job, and if I do it we win and I'm happy about that.

Halo: So you want to keep a low profile?

Minton: There you go. I'm just a middle-class American these days.

Halo: You mentioned Bryan Harvey. Ironically, he was sent to the minors to make room for you on the major league roster when the Angels signed you in 1987.

Minton: He actually had my uniform on when I flew to New York. When you're on waivers, you can't play for five days. I had to sit in the locker room one day, and here's this kid, No. 38, who's wearing my uniform. I asked around and they said, "don't worry, Greg, he won't be here long — you took his place."

Halo: You've pitched in both leagues now. Is there a big difference between them?

Minton: I think there used to be more of a difference a few years ago. The American League threw more off-speed pitches while the pitchers in the National League threw more fastballs. But I really think that's changed, and it shows in the fact that overall the hitting is down compared to the pitching this year. All the pitchers now are getting a third pitch, either a forkball, a change-up, a palm ball, something that's off speed. They don't have to throw that fastball when they're behind the count. So, in that sense most of the pitching is becoming about the same. And nowadays, pitchers move from league to league a lot. I'm running into more National League players here all the time.

Halo: Was there a fear after being released by the Giants that you wouldn't be picked up?

Minton: Oh, sure. A very big fear. I had some eight real good years in San Francisco and one mediocre and two absolutely lousy years. And, if you looked at the numbers, I stunk. I weighed about 245 pounds and I was out of shape and I just wasn't throwing good. I worked my rear-end off, lost 40 pounds, and came to camp with the Giants wanting to prove to them I could still pitch, that I wanted to again. And they never gave me the chance — for many reasons, mostly my own. I just didn't get a chance to pitch over there that year and they released me.

My dad had happened to have flown into town that day to watch me pitch. He went home that night and polished off a bottle of tequila, 'cause we didn't figure I was ever going to pitch again. It was a nice 10-year career and thank you very much.

Halo: But at the same time your stats weren't that bad at the time — 1-1 with a 3.47 ERA.

Minton: No, they weren't. But you have to understand that the city of San Francisco did not take Greg Minton to their bosom, so to speak. They ran me out of of there, pure and simple. They hated me, and it was bad. I had like a 2.10 ERA on the road and over 5 at home. I had trouble pitching at home. The Giants knew it. What I didn't know at the time was that they were trying to work on a trade. The Angels wanted me, but they were intelligent enough not to pick up my salary.

So, the Giants released me about 11 o'clock at night. My Dad and I polished off a bottle of tequila and at 7 the next morning, Mike Port calls me. We're talking severe fogged-over head here, folks. I'm having trouble hearing anything on the telephone. And at 7 o'clock in the morning somebody on the phone mumbles four or five sentences and I finally break in and say who the heck is this? And very slowly, very calmly, he goes, "My name is Mike Port, I'm the general manager of the Angels."

Halo: You had to prove yourself all over?

Minton: Oh, true. It was nobody's fault but my own. I stopped working, I stopped caring so much. I went through a divorce and I stopped caring about baseball — the family was more important to me, which it should be always. I went through a couple of years where I put it all on myself and it was nobody's fault but my own. I couldn't just go to the Angels or any other team and say, "I'm back, I can help you." Right, kid, sure. I had to prove it.

This year I really enjoy Doug's philosophy: "Greg, you got the middle innings, so keep us tied or ahead, we're going to turn it over to Bryan." That means so much to me. I was the closer for so many years, but I'm not the closer now. I can live easily with that. I'm like the momentum-stopper and Bryan is the closer. I have a job, it's important. I have something I'm supposed to do to help the team win. And if I do my job, I'm going to contribute and that makes me really happy.

Halo: Like performing surgery. You assist in a critical operation, but let the specialist close?

Minton: There you go! I honestly like throwing better with guys on base. My stats always said that. Why, I don't know.

Halo: These days it seems like a lot of relief pitchers complain when they're brought in with men on base.

Minton: If there's nobody on base when I come in, I'll walk the first son of a gun. I always do.

Halo: You mentioned being run out of San Francisco. Were the fans there really that bad?

Minton: You take a poll of the guys who have been in the National League and there's no place like Shea Stadium and Candlestick Park. In Candlestick it's so cold that everybody's got a flask, or something. I can't blame them, it's sub-zero weather there. By the third inning they're pretty much bleep-faced down there. I heard the brunt of it. It was about my mother and the milkman, things of that nature that went overboard. I couldn't let my family go to the games at all for a couple of years. I had to re-paint my car three times in a year-and-a-half, because people would take their keys and scratch it all up.

It wasn't good, and it got to me. I lost it a few times and went after people. It was a bad scene. I needed a change of scenery. As soon as I came over here, Gene Mauch called me into his office and asked me how my arm felt. I said it felt OK, and he told me to be ready in the last couple of innings. Wow! First day, all of a sudden he thought I could pitch. And sure enough he got me in the first game. It was in New York. Then we came right back to Anaheim and I came into the next game, and I heard some people clapping. I felt like a weight had gone off my shoulders. I'm serious. I went from about 4-foot-4 to 6-foot-6 in a real big hurry. It felt great. And that just reinforced how much I had missed baseball. Then I really started working. I still run every day.

Halo: So you're a born-again pitcher?

Minton: In a way. The wife has 90 percent to do with it. When my second wife Brenda and I got married she said I either get in shape or we're getting separate beds. I thought about that for all of three seconds and I said, "OK honey, what's next?" She's the whole moving force behind it. She's a physical therapist and has a background in nutrition. She put me on a thousand calorie-a-day diet, and she knew what kind of calories to eat. Take fat units. When you're talking calories, you can eat a thousand calories but if you have the wrong food you can still get 10, 12, 15 fat units out of it. We were trying to stay at two fat units. And I was running 6-to-10 miles every other day. And boy, as soon as the weight started coming off, I started feeling better. Now I'm addicted. I woke up this morning, at 10 minutes after six, and ran here. I run every day.

Halo: Did you give any thought to what you might have done if your baseball career had ended?

Minton: Everybody would like to make more money. If I could play until I'm 64 years old and still make money, great. I've been real fortunate and there isn't really a need for me to work after baseball. My Dad was a gardener growing up and we didn't have any money. I got one baseball glove and it lasted me for all of Little League. For a present at Christmas I got one for Pony League. I'm always scared of being broke. I signed a five-year, multimillion-dollar contract and I kept driving my Toyota. The money's OK. What I really want to do most, I guess, is to spend more time with my second family.

I have two young kids. I really feel bad about missing out on the first three kids in the first family. They're all grown now. Shoot, one of them's 20 years old. I didn't get to see them enough. So, I really don't want to work when I'm through with baseball. I'll get into something where I'll piddle at it. But basically I want to be with my family.

Halo: For an athlete who's earned the nickname, "Moon Man," you seem pretty tame. Are you the same Greg Minton who once got in trouble for stealing the team bus to go buy a pair of boots?

Minton: I also got fined for hang gliding and a whole bunch of stuff.

(Please See Page 14)

Every team I've played on I've gotten fined. Some of the people here, especially the new guys on the Angels, are coming up to me and asking where I got the nickname. To be honest, there must be eight guys a whole lot more loony tunes than I am in my own locker room.

Halo: It must be dangerous having you and Bert Blyleven in the same clubhouse?

Minton: His locker is two down from me. Just from my reputation I get blamed for half the stuff he does. I'm middle America now. If I came along right now you couldn't put the "Moon Man" nickname on me.

Halo: What nickname might be more appropriate now?

Minton: "Boring." I'm the first one here. I just try to do all my work and get all my running in. At my age you don't have a lot of energy left. At 38 years old you can't pull those kinds of pranks you used to at 24. I've really calmed down. I know it sounds dull and boring. It probably is. But if you polled the guys on the team right now they couldn't figure out why they call me "Moon Man."

Halo: You've established records for innings pitched without giving up home runs. Do you have any idea why you seem to be immune to the gopher ball?

Minton: I precisely know why. It doesn't sink like it used to, that's obvious — my tendons and ligaments aren't quite as loose as they used to be. What I do is throw a pitch between 88 and 90 miles an hour that's over the top, so it has a downward plane. It's sinking anyway. For me to give up a home run — and I give up a few of them — I have to make a major mistake. You've got a round ball and a round bat and when the ball is sinking down through the strike zone it's awfully tough to get it up in the air. So, I'll give up a whole bundle of singles, but that's OK. My whole philosophy of pitching since I started was if I give up three singles in one inning, you've got a run. But you're not going to get a cheap one off of me.

Halo: Sounds like you've done some study in physics?

Minton: That and the use of vaseline comes in real handy on a baseball.

Halo: What's the difference between this year's club and last Minton: Everybody can point to the starting pitching. And again, I'll back that up. That's a tremendous asset. When you can get into the sixth or seventh inning every single game either tied or ahead, then they're doing a tremendous job.

It's also a little bit of the atmosphere around here. Not knocking Cookie Rojas, but it's much more positive with Doug Rader. He's got one of those kind of attitudes where "OK, boys, we showed up, so let's go ahead and strap it on and go get 'em." There aren't as many team rules. We're here to play baseball. Doug was always a rough player. He came to play — I played against him, that's how old I am. I had to face him a lot. He was going to battle your butt until somebody won, and it had carried over. Guys have defined jobs now. We know what we're doing. We come to play. There's no nickle and diming.

Halo: Every player seems to know his role.

Minton: Very true. I come to the ballpark knowing that if I can get two innings of good work in, we're probably going to win a ball game today. You can point toward something. You've got your energy focused to getting ready for two good innings. It makes a big difference. Turn it over to Bryan and Bryan knows if he can get three, four, five outs we win the game. Everybody knows. Our pitching staff right now is doing outstanding. And we've got guys on this team who can hit better than they are. I'm not knocking the ones who aren't hitting. I'm saying that when we get hot with the bat we can reel off 17 wins out of 20 real easy. And we could be a better ballclub than we are now.

Halo: As far as the roster, everyone appears to get along well. Is that true?

Minton: If anything, I think the Angels needed a couple of attitude problems, to be honest. I came from the Giants, and we had some bleeps over there. But they're the correct kind. They get on your case. If you're not doing good, they rip you about it. They get under your skin a little bit. They tick you off a little. When I first came to the Angels we had the nicest, sweetest bunch of boys you ever saw. And that's great, that's the way they are, that's no problem. They're quiet. When the game's over, they go home. Fine.

aound, have a few beers and talk some baseball. There's no holds barred, there's nothing sacred in the locker room anymore. Bert (Blyleven) and (Bob) McClure and myself, we're going to get on your case. We're going to needle you, and that's good. You need a few guys to shake things up and not have such a "nice" team all the time.

Halo: To do the kind of thing Kirk Gibson did for the Dodgers last year?

Minton: Sure. He rattled some cages. I think the good teams, you look down through the past, you had a few boys with the team who were a little shakey with the sanity part. But they kept that team loose and they kept it playing.

Halo: You're 38, and were almost out of baseball. Will you take stock after this season before deciding on next year, or the year after that?

Minton: Oh, I'm taking things very much a year at a time. In fact, the Angels talked to me about a month-to-month contract next year (he laughs). To be perfectly honest, I've talked to guys about it, and they think I'm nuts, but if we could get to a World Series and I could finally be in one and have a good year this year, it wouldn't be that hard for me to call it quits. The travel kills me. Six-hour plane rides after three knee operations, I can't even straighten up after one of those. And I don't like being away from the family anymore. I'm a middle-age man, running my miles, trying to milk one more year out of my body. It wouldn't be hard at all to bow out after a good solid year and a championship just so I could prove to myself I helped the team, I could still pitch, I still did the job after the Giants released me.

Halo: Getting into the World Series has to be the ultimate dream for any ballplayer.

Minton: I've been in an All-Star game. And that was so much different than I had ever dreamed. (Tommy) Lasorda called me in the eighth inning to relieve Fernando Valenzuela. I do not to this day remember walking from the bullpen into the game. If that was that great, what would a World Series be like? I've been off and on the big leagues since '75, I'd give my left — no I wouldn't, I'd give something I can't mention right now to be in a World Series. Boy, if I could do that I'd feel

CENTINELA HOSPITAL MEDICAL CENTER

THE CHOICE OF CHAMPIONS.

More professional athletes use Centinela Hospital Medical Center than any other hospital in Southern California. And there's good reason why.

Because many of our physicians are leaders in their fields. That's why the White House and State Department designated Centinela Hospital as the official hospital for emergency treatment for the President and other dignitaries while in Los Angeles.

We're a 403-bed, nonprofit, acute care facility offering full-service healthcare. Best of all, we treat everyone like a star.

Brewers, although his mental attitude was even lower.

"The day they put me on the D.L. I couldn't play," Schroeder recalls. "But the injury wasn't that bad. I probably could have played about three days later."

With Surhoff firmly entrenched in the starting role, Schroeder exercised his right to demand a trade after the season. He doesn't regret it.

"I realize I'm an insurance policy for (Lance) Parrish, especially considering the injuries he's had in the past," Schroeder says. "But that's OK. I know my role, and accept it. I'm doing everything I can to help the team. We all know how important Lance is for us to be successful."

Thus far, Schroeder has seen limited action. He's spelled Parrish behind the plate, as well as Wally Joyner at first base. He was working in the former position when rookie Jim Abbott made his major league debut. The fact he and Parrish share the same catching philosophy has made the backstop duties easy. What's harder is hitting, especially when it comes intermittently against some of the best southpaws in the league.

"Hitting is tough," Schroeder agrees. "It seems I'm always in there against the tough lefties like Frank Viola, Greg Swindell and Ted Higuera. It's a challenge, because they change speeds so much — it's not like hitting against the coaches in batting practice. So hitting is one of the toughest things to do when you're not playing regularly.

"Actually," Schroeder continues, "it's harder to sit on the bench when you're losing than it is when you're winning. When things are going well for the team, you just try to do your part and hope it continues. When the team is losing, it's awful tough not to be in there trying to contribute."

Schroeder and his family of four — wife Donna and children Lindsey, Bill and Mallory — have mixed feelings about the trade. The catcher feels fortunate to be playing in Southern California, although his immediate family continues to live in the Milwaukee area — a decision taken to avoid uprooting the children from school. Donna, Bill's wife of eight years, has most of her family in California, so she's happy about her husband's new assignment. Most of the Schroeder clan resides in New Jersey, so visits during the season will probably be less frequent. But, that could change at year's end. Schroeder is signed through the 1989 campaign.

Right now, all he's hoping to do is provide a solid backup for Parrish. If he's an insurance policy, he can't wait to provide dividends.

"It's funny," Schroeder says. "(Bob) McClure and I were talking about the divisions. When we were in Milwaukee, the American League East was baseball's strongest division. Now that we're with the Angels, the West is the strongest."

It just may not be an accident.

Bob Boone

'I'LL ALWAYS BE AN ANGEL'

By Ken Nichols

Hey, Bob Boone, what's the toughest part about leaving the Angels and becoming a member of the Kansas City Royals?

Is it adjusting to the midwestern lifestyle? Learning to work with a completely new pitching staff? Is it being the "new guy" in the clubhouse, even though you're 41 years old?

Or is it the fact that home and family are still in Villa Park, while you spend most of your time in Missouri?

Boone answered quickly: none of the above.

The biggest adjustment of all, he said, was that darned blue uniform.

"I look — well, different — in blue," Boone said. "I've been with the Phillies and the Angels, so I've worn red all my life. The toughest thing about coming over here is that I had no underwear that matched."

Boone could afford to joke about his situation because the Royals were hot, and for most of the early part of the season, so was Boone.

After a heady romp in the .400 range during early April, Boone's batting average settled down to a comfortable .290 by the end of the month.

Last season, when Boone hit a career-high .295, he told reporters, "I finally learned how to hit. I'm just mad it took me so long to do it."

They laughed, but when Boone started the '89 season with the same explosion in his bat, the laughing stopped. Did Boone really discover something last year?

"No, I lied," Boone said. "I don't think anybody will ever really figure this game out. I was doing OK earlier, but I'm hitting lousy right now. I really need some help."

Maybe facing the Angels will stoke the fires.

Boone is excited about the opportunity to play against his former teammates, but he approaches it with mixed feelings.

"I'll always be an Angel," Boone said. "I miss the guys, and I miss the clubhouse. But I'm enjoying life in Kansas City. It's a completely different lifestyle, but I love the area.

"Doug DeCinces told me he always did real well against Baltimore because there's nothing better than going against your former team. I never had that chance when I left Philadelphia."

Once he joined the Angels, Boone spent his springs in Arizona instead of Florida, so he never got to face the Phillies even in an exhibition game. That changed when he joined the Royals, who train in the new Baseball City complex in Florida.

"It was exciting," Boone said. "I got goose bumps, even though most of the old guys I knew were gone. And I'll feel even more excited when we play the Angels.

"I talked to Lance Parrish, and he told me how pumped up he was when he went back to Detroit. You only hope you're not too pumped up. I know sometimes you can overdo it and try to do too much. I guess you have to put a lid on your emotions."

Boone also had to temper his emotions last fall, when he decided to sign with the Royals as a free agent after seven seasons with the Angels.

"Kansas City came to me with a great opportunity," he said. "I fit in. They needed a catcher. It was a business decision. There's a lot of emotion that goes on, but in the end, it's a business decision, cut and dried.

"The Angels went out and got Lance Parrish, which really improved the team, and I was sitting in the position of being a free agent for a limited amount of time. I was facing the prospect of splitting time with Lance at the catching position, regardless of how well I did. Then along comes Kansas City with their offer.

"I think the Angels made some good moves to improve themselves, and I made a move that turned out to be best for Bob Boone."

Although he only signed a one-year contract and will turn 42 shortly after this season ends, Boone isn't planning on the '89 season being his last.

"They're going to have to tear the uniform off me," he said. "Somebody else is going to have to tell me when I'm finished."

He still can't envision a "Bob Boone Day" or a farewell tour like Kareem Abdul-Jabbar of the Lakers enjoyed.

"I've never thought of myself as anything special. I'm a bit of a freak because I've played so long, but I don't think of myself as having done the things to ever warrant having a Bob Boone Day," he said. "I couldn't even imagine that.

"Like almost every other player, I'll just keep going down the pike until they don't want me anymore. One day, nobody will offer me a contract. That's business. I think that's how it will go. And that's fine with me."

And then what? Boone's name has been mentioned often as a future managerial prospect.

"I might like to manage one day, but I really can't say I have managerial aspirations," Boone said. "All I have are playing aspirations.

"When I sit down and reflect, what does the future hold for Bob Boone after he finishes playing, the first thing I have to ask myself is, well, what do I enjoy doing? I enjoy trying to figure out the game and trying to beat it, I love going to college and high school games, just watching young people play. I love every aspect of the game.

"And when you put that all together and ask, what does that mean you'd like to do, it comes out to be a manager. But I can't say that's what I want to do with the rest of my life. There's too many variables in that.

"First of all, there are only 26 jobs in the world. Secondly, somebody else has to want you. It's not really a job where you can go knock on doors and put in your application.

"What I do know is that I love the game, and my love for the game has grown the older I've gotten and the more time I've put in."

Part of the reason the Royals wanted Boone was because of his leadership abilities and his potential as a respected voice of experience in the clubhouse. Boone isn't too comfortable with that.

"I've always questioned the whole idea of clubhouse leadership and what it is," he said. "I think a team develops its own personality, and it's made up of a whole lot of different personalities. Hopefully, that personality will come out to be a strong and positive one, but I don't think one guy gets up and carries the flag.

"When every guy goes out there and busts his rear and plays hard, there's no difficulty for me fitting in.

"God gave me something I can't explain, and I don't even try. I'm just enjoying it, just taking it for what it's worth. The reality of it is, I shouldn't be able to do what I'm doing at this time. I can't explain it."

"I never liked the handle of leader in the clubhouse. I just try to be myself. There's no act. You can't con ballplayers. Just be yourself."

Specifically, the Royals have asked Boone to work closely with one of their young catching prospects, Mike McFarlane.

"He's got a chance to be a very good one," Boone said. "We've spent a lot of time on his mechanics and talking about calling a game, analyzing the opposition, things like that. I've gotten a lot of enjoyment imparting some of the things I've learned over the years. Any time you can help a teammate, it gives you satisfaction."

And what if McFarlane were to ask Boone someday, "What's the secret to being able to catch into your 40's?"

"There's no secret. Conditioning is extremely important, year-round, demanding-type conditioning," Boone said. "There's no doubt in my mind that conditioning has kept me injury-free and allowed me to play as long as I have.

"But I guess the biggest thing is just say your prayers and hope you're as blessed to stay around this long. For me, even with all the conditioning and mental preparation I've done, it's just been a gift for me.

"God gave me something I can't explain, and I don't even try. I'm just enjoying it, just taking it for what it's worth. The reality of it is, I shouldn't be able to do what I'm doing at this time. I can't explain it."

Test drive a Honda dealer.

Everyone knows how great Hondas are. They're raved about in car magazines. And raved about by customers.

But what about a Honda dealer? He knows cars, for one thing. He's the local Honda expert. He knows his customers: what they want, what they need, how to get them into a new car. And he knows that service is everything.

He really is as dependable as the cars he sells.

That may be why for 12 years, more people have bought Hondas again and again than any other leading import.*

So come on in. Start up a Honda dealer. If he can't take you where you're going, no one can.

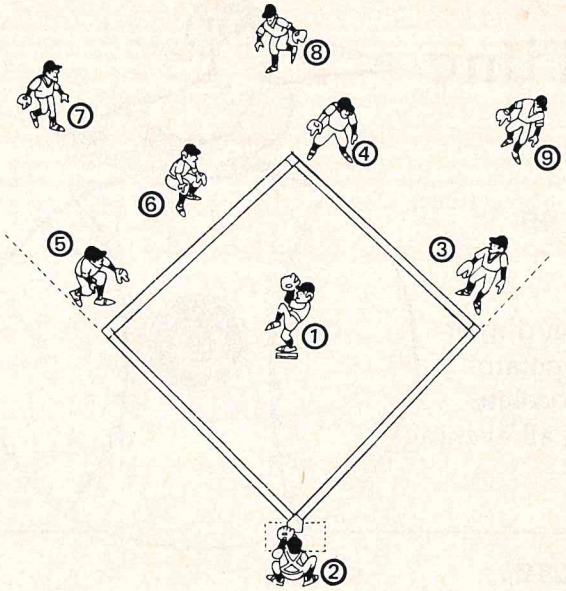
How To Score

Angel fans whether at home or at Anaheim Stadium can enjoy baseball more by keeping score of the game. It's easy. All you need is a basic knowledge of baseball's rules.

Experts use a simple notation, which is based on numbering players by their positions.

Number Players As Follows

1—Pitcher; 2—Catcher; 3—First Baseman; 4—Second Baseman; 5—Third Baseman; 6—Shortstop; 7—Left Fielder; 8—Center Fielder; 9—Right Fielder; DH—Designated Hitter.



Symbols for Plays

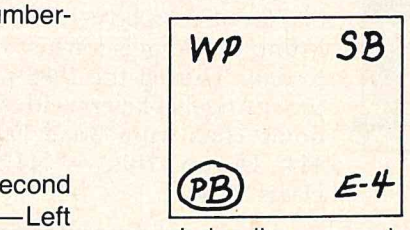
Single—	Fielders Choice—FC
Double =	Hit by Pitcher—HP
Triple ≡	Wild Pitch—WP
Home Run ≡	Passed Ball—PB
Sacrifice—SH	Stolen Base—SB
Walk—BB	Force Out—FO
Strikeout—K	Double Play—DP
Balk—BK	Error—E
Foul Fly—F	Sacrifice Fly—SF

Additional Symbols:

IW—Intentional Walk
KC—Called out on strikes
L—Line Drive
B—Bunt
⌇—New pitcher or new batter

Every time a batter goes to the plate, use the number to indicate how he was retired or how he reached.

Fielding plays retiring batters or runners also call for use of numbers. For instance, the batter who grounds out to the shortstop is retired 6-3 in your scoring. If he flies to the right fielder, merely use the figure 9. If it is foul: 9F.



In example to left, batter reached first on an error by the second baseman, stole second, went to third on a wild pitch and scored on a passed ball. It is convenient to encircle all runs as shown so that scoring plays may be seen at a glance.

Sample Score Sheet

Team		1	2
4 2nd Baseman		2-6
8 Center Fielder		FC = (PB)
5 3rd Baseman		4-3
DH Designated Hitter		HP
3 1st Baseman		8
2 Catcher			6-4 BB
7 Left Fielder			DP 6-4-3
9 Right Fielder			⊜
6 Shortstop			3F
1 Pitcher
Totals	R / H	1 / 2	1 / 1

Inning 1

4 singled, thrown out stealing (catcher to shortstop)

8 doubled, advanced to 3rd on a fielder's choice, scored on passed ball

5 thrown out (2nd to 1st)—fielder's choice

DH hit by pitcher, took 1st base

3 flied out to center field end of inning

Inning 2

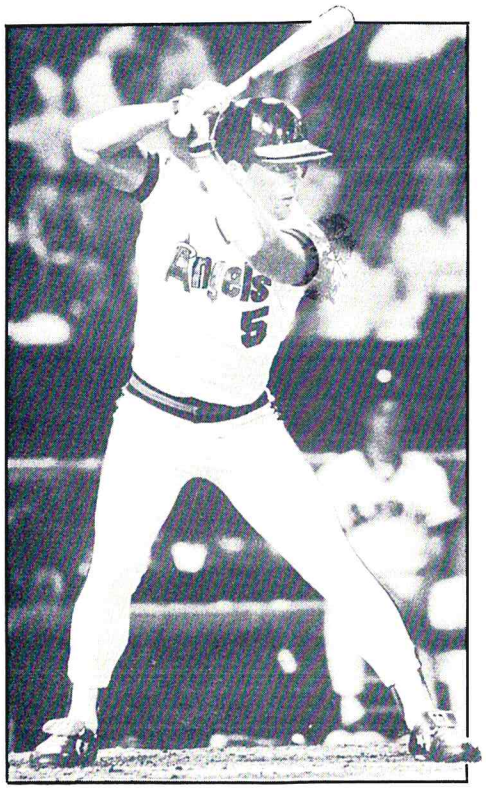
2 walked, later forced out shortstop to 2nd base (1st half of double play)

7 hit into double play (shortstop to 2nd base to 1st base

9 hit home run

6 fouled out to 1st base

IBM TALE OF THE TAPE



Brian Downing

During the season, the IBM Tale of the Tape program lets you know the distance every home run hit here at Anaheim Stadium traveled immediately after it is hit. At the end of the season, IBM, an official sponsor of Major League Baseball, will contribute a total of $10,000 to the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation and the Pediatric Cancer Research Foundation in honor of the three Angel players who hit the longest home runs.

Tale of the Tape measurements are based on a survey of the distance from home plate to all seats in fair territory. From this survey, an Angel official will determine the distance a home run has traveled and will relay the information for display on the scoreboard.

During each game the Angels will display a scoreboard announcement listing the Angels longest home runs to date. During the 1988 season, the three Angels players with the longest home runs were Brian Downing — 444'; Devon White — 444'; and Chili Davis — 428'.

This summer, The Equitable is giving some old friends a chance to touch base.

©1989 The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, New York, N.Y.

When a bunch of baseball legends get together on the same diamond, they're bound to stir up a lot more than memories.

Especially this summer.

Because this year marks the 50th Anniversary of the Baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, New York.

To celebrate this historic occasion, The Equitable is proud to sponsor the first-ever Old-Timers' Game to be played at Cooperstown. Along with Old-Timers' games in all 26 Major League ballparks.

It's all because at The Equitable, we're extremely committed to Major League Baseball and its fans.

Since 1947, in fact, we've managed the Major League's pension fund and group health insurance. And we can offer you the same kind of professional service. With a diverse range of insurance and investment products designed to help you carry out your financial game plan.

So come out to the ballpark and enjoy the fun. After all, guys like this don't touch base every day.

ALL-STAR GAME CELEBRATION WEEK

JULY 4-11

This year's All-Star Game will cap the most exciting week in Anaheim Stadium history. The annual contest, featuring the best players in baseball, is scheduled to take place at Anaheim Stadium Tuesday, July 11. It follows a series of special events designed to entertain the entire family.

"I think it'll be great," says Johnny Grant, one of Southern California's most beloved personalities and producer of the weeklong series of events.

"It's never been done before," he says. "It's the first time in history we'll be combining two of America's favorite pastimes, the entertainment business and baseball. I'm really looking forward to it."

So are Angel fans.

The festivities get under way July 4 with a spectacular post-game fireworks extravaganza following the game between the Angels and the vastly improved Texas Rangers. While the Angels traditionally treat their supporters to a fireworks display, this year's version promises to be the most spectacular in baseball history.

"We hope to have some hot air balloons out there," Grant says, "and combine the fireworks with a laser show. It should be fantastic."

The following day, pregame ceremonies will feature the official Orange County Centennial Parade, commemorating 100 years of growth and prosperity. The hourlong parade will include bands, floats, equestrian units, Walt Disney characters, local

On Thursday, July 6, the Angels will offer a salute to the Armed Forces. Prior to the series finale with Texas, a U.S. Marine recon team will rappel into the stadium. There will be an exciting aerial demonstration by a Marine unit, and a Navy parachute team will execute a dramatic jump into the stadium with chutists landing at each base and at home plate.

And that's not all.

The 3rd Marine Air Wing Band will perform a variety of patriotic songs, and there will be additional marching units from each branch of the Armed Forces. After an inspiring rendition of the National Anthem, Air National Guard F-4E Phantom jets from March Air Force Base will fly over the stadium in formation. Major General Donald E.P. Miller, commanding general of the 3rd Marine Aircraft Wing, will throw out the ceremonial first ball.

The powerful Minnesota Twins invade Anaheim Stadium on Friday, July 7, and fans attending the game against the 1987 World Champions will be treated to Western Heritage Night.

The legendary Gene Autry will be honored by the Orange County Centennial Committee for his contribution to the preservation of America'a Western heritage.

On hand will be an array of motion picture and TV stars from the past and present, along with colorful equestrian groups, Mariachi and Western bands and some rugged rodeo stars who will put on an old-fashioned rope and ride exhibition.

On Saturday, July 8, the Angels' with a special midseason Fan Appreciation Game.

"We'll be giving away major prizes," Johnny Grant says, "like trips to Paris and Tokyo." Television and motion picture celebrities will conduct the drawings immediately following the ballgame, which will be carried live on national TV as the NBC Game of the Week.

Prior to the Sunday, July 9 match with Minnesota, the Angels will present the Equitable Old-Timers Game, featuring some of the greatest players the game has ever seen. The pregame scrimmage is a popular annual attraction, but it will be bigger than ever with the 1989 All-Star Game just a few days away.

Monday, July 10, is an open day on the baseball schedule. However, there'll be plenty going on at Anaheim Stadium. The American and National League All-Stars will be working out, with the most powerful players competing in a home run-hitting contest. It's sure to be a sight to see.

The weeklong series of events concludes on Tuesday, July 11, when the two leagues square off against each other. It will be the culmination of the most exciting week in California Angels history.

"The fact it's the whole week makes it exciting," Grant agrees. "It'll be fun for everyone, and I'm really excited about it. I did the Hollywood Centennial Year, and I produce the Hollywood Christmas Parade, which draws the biggest crowd in L.A. every year — a million people. So I've done some big things before, and been involved in a lot of excitement. But this really is a challenge, to pull off this many

ORANGE COUNTY CENTENNIAL

ANAHEIM STADIUM

Orange County entered major league sports on April 4, 1966 when Anaheim Stadium hosted an exhibition game between the Angels and the San Francisco Giants. Since that time, nearly 43 million baseball fans have attended regular season games at the world class stadium.

The 43,250-seat stadium was expanded to hold more than 70,000 fans after the Los Angeles Rams moved to Anaheim in 1979. The Rams played their first pre-season game against New England on August 11, 1979, and opened against the Detroit Lions on September 7, of that year.

In addition to baseball, football and other sports, Anaheim Stadium attracts millions of visitors each year to tractor pulls, motorcycle races, Mickey Thompson's moto cross, and numerous home improvement, recreation and auto shows. During the Centennial year, Anaheim Stadium will play host to the 1989 All-Star Game, marking the second time this Midsummer Classic has been played in Anaheim. On July 11, 1967, the longest All-Star Game in history, 15 innings, was played at Anaheim Stadium and won by the National League, 2-1.

The 60th All-Star Game, scheduled for July 11, 1989, will be preceded by a week of Centennial events, including a July 4th fireworks display, a Centennial Parade and an Old-Timers Game, with many members of the Hall of Fame playing.

Reach home safely...
Choose a designated driver!
When you plan a trip to the ballpark, be a TEAM player–choose a designated driver to make sure you reach home safely. This season we're working even harder to promote responsibility in the service and consumption of alcohol. We need your help to keep things safe in the stands and on the roads. So make sure your lineup has a designated driver. That's the person you can count on to get you home safely.

STUMP THE UMP

Bases loaded, two out, full count.
Knuckleballing pitcher fans
knuckleheaded hitter with pitch in dirt.
Bouncing ball gets by catcher and deflects off of umpire on way to backstop.
Runners from second and third score,
batter-runner stands on first.
What is the call?

ANSWER

Play counts. Rule 5.09. If a third strike (not a foul tip) passes the catcher and hits an umpire, the ball is in play.

CIF-SS/ANGELS/FORD ACADEMIC PROGRAM

The CIF-SS Academic Awards Program sponsored by the California Angels and Ford Motor Company enters its third year with 88 girl and 81 boy student-athletes of the year. These students compiled a minimum 3.50 grade point average in college preparatory courses during their sophomore, junior and senior years. To be eligible for the program, these outstanding students also had to participate in a varsity athletic sport and extra-curricular activity during their senior year.

Twenty one teams were selected as Academic Team Champions for the twenty one CIF-SS team sports. The combined grade point average for the teams was required to be in excess of 3.00 in college preparatory courses during the first semester of this school year.

The individual student-athletes of the year and all members of the Academic Team Champions will be presented with certificates prior to the June 6 Angels' game. The coach and team representative of the Academic Team Champions will be presented with a permanent banner at that time.

The names of this year's honored student-athletes follow:

THE TRANSFORMATION OF JACK HOWELL

By Tom Power

What advice would you give an aspiring athlete who, as a high school senior, stands 5 - foot - 6, weighs 145 pounds and in his past two seasons of baseball had batted .150 and .220?

"Become a jockey" would be good. Or perhaps even better: "Make sure you choose a college where you can get a good, solid education. You'll need it."

In 1979, Jack Howell was that scrawny, weak-hitting little kid.

But he didn't care for horse racing (in fact, his childhood dream was to play in the NBA), and no universities were offering him scholarships — not for basketball, baseball or anything else.

So the advice he embraced most came from his mother — "Try these vitamins, son."

Today, Howell stands 6-foot-0, weighs nearly 200 pounds, and is the regular third baseman for the California Angels.

His transformation took place in less than two years time.

Howell had gone from Palo Verde High in Tucson to Eastern Junior College, also in Arizona, to try out for the baseball team. He quickly decided that he wasn't destined for stardom.

"I was kind of overmatched and I knew it," Howell said. "Then my dad got real sick with heart problems, and when I went home at Christmas time, I just stayed. I never went back to Eastern."

Howell sat out a year to be near his father, then enrolled at Pima Junior College in his hometown of Tucson and tried out for baseball as an unknown walk-on.

The year at home made all the difference in the world.

"I started lifting weights, and my mom got me on Shaklee vitamins and protein shakes," Howell said. "I grew about four inches and gained about 40 pounds in that year. I guess I was just late in maturing."

Suddenly, Howell was a prospect.

"I was stronger and more mature and really starting to come into my own," Howell said, "and I ended up being one of the better players on the team that year."

After two years at Pima JC, Howell drew the attention of the prestigious baseball program at the University of Arizona. He earned a scholarship, started at third base, hit .280, and continued to pop vitamins and drink protein shakes.

"Then I went to Alaska and led the league in hitting and had a good year," Howell said. "Some (big-league) clubs started showing an interest in me after that."

Houston, Seattle and the Angels all sent scouts to contact Howell on the last day of the Alaskan League playoffs. Howell was impressed most by the Angels' offer and signed, electing to pass up his senior year at Arizona.

It was a remarkably quick journey for the athlete, considering how far removed from a pro contract he seemed just a few years earlier. Even dreaming about it would have seemed a little silly.

"The only thing I had going for me, all through Little League and high school, was a good arm," Howell said. "For as long as I could remember, I always had a good arm. That's all I had.

"I pitched all the time in Little League and had a few no-hitters, but I just threw hard. That's all. The last time I pitched, I think, was in the Alaskan League. I threw about five innings in relief.

"I might have had a future as a pitcher at one time, but when I started to get bigger and hit for a little power, that ended that."

In his first season as a pro, Howell batted .395 for Salem, an eye-popping statistic, even though he only played the final 21 games of the season, because this was the same guy who hit .220 as a high school senior.

During his two seasons with the Angels' Triple-A club at Edmonton, Howell batted .373 and .359.

When Doug DeCinces retired and Howell became the Angels' regular third baseman in 1987, he hit 23 home runs.

But few would call Howell a natural. Just as he pumped iron and gulped protein to improve his body, he has had to work hard to become a hitter.

"A lot of people don't realize this," Howell said, "but the two years I hit way over .300 in the minor leagues, there would be days when I'd get two or three hits, and the next day I'd be out early working on something in batting practice.

"I was always experimenting. I don't know if experimenting is the right word, but adjusting. I just knew I was the kind who had to take a lot of batting practice, even in the minors. I was always hitting early, just keeping that feeling."

It was that work ethic that kept Howell sane as he struggled through one of the worst slumps of his career earlier this season. He started the year with just five hits in his first 50 at-bats, and by April 26, he was hitting exactly .100.

The slump actually started in his home state of Arizona back in February.

"All my batting practices in spring training were horrible," Howell said. "Nothing felt good.

"The first week or two in Mesa, you just try to get in shape, get loose, get ready to go, maybe work on some things. Then about the time we finish in Arizona and get to Palm Springs, hopefully you've got the feel in every batting practice, and you just carry it through into the games.

"But I was still experimenting when we got to Palm Springs. By the time of the Freeway Series, I was starting to feel a little better, and things were starting to come around. But that thing was over in three days, and suddenly you're in the heat of battle."

The club was playing well and winning a lot of games, but Howell felt left out. In three different games, every man in the Angel lineup got at least one hit except Howell.

"The thing that made it seem worse was it happened at the beginning of the year," said Manager Doug Rader. "If he'd had that kind of slump in June, people wouldn't have noticed so much.

"But at the beginning of the year, you have to re-affirm your ability to perform, and until that happens, you have a bad feeling about it. If you have a good streak and go bad, at least you can hang onto the good streak. But Jack didn't have anything to hang onto."

Ironically, April had always been Howell's best month. His career batting average in April was .295.

"Everybody wanted to help. I heard all kinds of suggestions," Howell said. "But the only one that worked was when people said, 'Just keep on hacking.' In other words, if you just keep on swinging, sooner or later things will start breaking your way and you'll get that feeling back. And that's what ended up happening."

ALS isn't Lou Gehrig's disease.

It's everyone's disease.

LOU GEHRIG
Baseball's greatest first baseman
Born: 1903
Diagnosed with ALS: 1939
Died: 1941

ALS, Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis (often called Lou Gehrig's disease), slowly destroys the nerves that move your muscles until your body is completely destroyed, but leaving your mind intact. So the simple things you do every day become impossible to do.

Although ALS isn't a rare disease, people think it is. Yet some 300,000 Americans who are apparently alive and well today will die with ALS. That's why Major League Baseball has joined forces with The ALS Association to dedicate the 1989 season as a 50th Anniversary Year Tribute to Lou Gehrig. This campaign is designed to raise awareness and funds to help The ALS Association conquer the disease that brought down the Iron Man of Baseball.

The ALS Association is the only national nonprofit voluntary health organization dedicated solely to the fight against Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis. It wages the battle against ALS through an aggressive program of cutting edge research and caring patient support because although the cause is unknown and there is no cure, much can be done not only to help patients live with the disease, but live more productively and independently.

ALS can attack anyone — you or someone you love. Major League Baseball is going to bat in honor of Lou Gehrig to finally knock out this dread disease. Please join us and them. Send your contribution or call for more information.

But until it did, Howell could be found in the batting cage every day, long before the other players arrived, taking extra swings.

One Sunday afternoon at Anaheim Stadium, after the Angels had just beaten Seattle 13-5, Howell told hit-going out to take more batting practice. Howell had struck out three times in the game.

"I told him to go home, have a barbecue with his family, forget about baseball for a while, and maybe come in early the next day to work," Johnson said. "Sometimes, the guy is just too intense. He needs to relax and

What Johnson didn't understand was that Howell still thinks like a 5-foot-6, 145-pounder who believes he must work harder than everybody else to succeed.

"I'm the kind who gets down on myself for every little thing I do," Howell admits. "I'm pretty hard on myself most of the time. It's what

MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL®
ALL-STAR FAN BALLOTING

1989 ALL-STAR GAME
CALIFORNIA ANGELS

OFFICIAL SPONSOR
USA TODAY®

Major League Baseball's 60th All-Star Game is coming up, and once again the starting players will be determined by you, the fans. For the third consecutive year, fans across the USA will be able to participate by making their selections in USA TODAY, the Official Sponsor of Major League Baseball All-Star Fan Balloting.

In addition to being available in all Major and Minor League ballparks, official ballots will be printed in USA TODAY a total of 12 times from May 9-June 28. Look for your ballot on Tuesdays and Wednesdays in USA TODAY where over 5.3 million readers will have the opportunity to get involved in the exciting All-Star election process, along with hundreds of thousands of fans in ballparks across the USA.

"USA TODAY-sponsored fan balloting is a great way to extend balloting to more fans," said USA TODAY president Tom Curley. "We're delighted that fan participation has increased in the first two years of our sponsorship because it enhances the fans' association with baseball's All-Stars."

Last season, USA TODAY readers and fans at ballparks cast over 6.1 million ballots, an increase of more than 500,000 over the 1988 total. St. Louis shortstop Ozzie Smith received 2,106,757 votes, and was awarded the USA TODAY Top Vote-Getter trophy for the second consecutive year. Oakland Athletics star Jose Canseco led American League All-Star with 1,765,499 votes.

For the first time in 1989, USA TODAY will present two Top Vote-Getter trophies, to the players who lead each league in votes.

As in 1987 and 1988, for every fan ballot returned, USA TODAY will make a donation to the Baseball Alumni Team (B.A.T.), an organization dedicated to assisting retired baseball players. USA TODAY president Tom Curley presented a check for $31,000 to former brooklyn Dodger All-Star Carl Erskine, who now serves on the B.A.T. Board of Directors.

On Tuesday, July 11, the mid-summer classic will be placed at Anaheim Stadium, home of the American League's California Angels. This is the first All-Star game hosted by the Angels since the National League's thrilling 2-1 victory there in 1967. The National League has won 14 of the last 18 decisions, although the American League, winners of two of the last three, including last year's 2-1 battle, is seeking to continue their recent run of All-Star success.

This season, as an added incentive to baseball fans, USA TODAY will award one lucky fan an all-expense paid trip to the All-Star Game. Fans simply need to fill in their name and address on the back of their ballot to enter.

The All-Star ballot will feature a player from each team at every position. In all, the 1989 ballot will include 208 players, ranging from perennial All-Star favorites to players appearing on the ballot for the first time. Fans can also write in their selections for players not on the ballot.

USA TODAY's commitment to increasing fan participation in the All-Star balloting process also included a special arrangement with Anheuser-Busch, whereby fans across the USA will be able to receive official ballots at participating Budweiser and Bud Light retailers. In addition, one lucky fan will win a brand new car and truck from Chevrolet in the Pair of Cars Sweepstakes.

So vote early and vote often, at the ballpark and on Tuesdays and Wednesdays in USA TODAY. And remember, when you vote, you can win!

Life.
Turn it on.
